

ORCOM

Oral Communication in Context

Grade 12, Semester 1 study outline

A summary of section headings and key terms, made by students for revision. It is not the handout and does not replace it.

01. Communication-Its Nature and Process

Communication-Its Nature and Process

NATURE OF COMMUNICATION

- Communication is the process of giving and receiving information between a human source and a human receiver using words, symbols, or actions.
- Communication is a two-way process of connecting to both living and nonliving things.
- It is also a means of sharing and exchanging messages, information, ideas, and feelings for mutual understanding .

1. Communication is a message understood

- The person who gets this message would wonder what it means, for the arrangement of the words does not make any sense.
- Therefore, for communication to take place, we have to consider two conditions: First, there should be a clear message.
- Second, the message must be understood by the receiver for whom it is meant.

2. Communication is a social interaction through messages

- Thus, we may say that "communication is a sharing of experience." In our society, we all interact with messages.
- Social interaction is always through messages.

PROCESS OF COMMUNICATION

2. The sender sends the signals (speaks) through a channel (such as air)

4. The receiver hears the signals using the ears

5. The receiver converts (or decodes) the signals into thoughts

6. The receiver sends feedback by becoming the sender

6. Rather, the process happens in a rapid back-and-forth but still orderly way

Key terms

Communication - process of giving and receiving information between a human source and a human
Unless a message - understood, we cannot say that communication has taken place

02. Communication-Its Elements and Types

Communication-Its Elements and Types

ELEMENTS OF COMMUNICATION

- They are composed of the following:

1. Senders

- They convey messages by converting their thoughts into symbols or observable signals such as words. (This is called codification and is usually done through the use of language.)

2. Receivers

- They hear the signals and convert the symbols into their thoughts. (This is called decoding, deciphering, or interpretation.) In doing so, the receiver must hear (observe) the signals correctly.
- Note: - Not only should the symbols be heard correctly, they should also have the same meaning for both senders and receivers.
- If not, a breakdown in communication will occur. - The sender is also responsible for dividing the symbols into chunks that are decipherable (understandable) to receivers. - Both senders and receivers must be competent in

- communication. - In many communication activities, senders and receivers switch roles frequently.
- That means the sender becomes a receiver, and the receiver becomes the sender.

3. Messages

- These are the ideas or thoughts that are transmitted from sender to receiver. - They are the result of the interpretation of symbols when meaning is derived from observable signals.
- In turn, correct interpretation by the receiver of the symbols sent by a sender is greatly affected by the similarity between the culture and experience of the sender and receiver. - The culture and experience together are called schema.
- Some theoreticians call this 'the field of experience'. (When there is much similarity between the schema of the sender and receiver, there is a much bigger chance of correct interpretation.)

4. Verbal and Nonverbal Symbols

- Symbols are observable signals transmitted from sender to receiver and it can come in any observable form. - Symbols do not have meaning in themselves.

Verbal Symbol

- They come in the form of utterances from the mouth.
- They usually come in the form of spoken words, but they may also be in other forms.

Nonverbal Symbol

- They come from body movements other than that of the mouth.

5. Channels

- It refers to the medium through which the message is sent.
- It connects the sender and the receiver. - Usually, it is the air around the sender and the receiver.

6. Feedback

- It refers to the message transmitted by the receiver in response to the message of the speaker. - It enables the sender to make adjustments to the signals he or she sent, such as improving the pronunciation of words or speaking louder. - It also enables the sender to make adjustments to how he or she codifies his ...

TYPES OF COMMUNICATION

1. Intrapersonal

2. Interpersonal

- It involves talking to one or a limited number of people. (This requires you to adjust your speech to suit the character and personality of the person or people you talk to.) Dyad - It is an interpersonal communication between two people.
- Small group - It is an interpersonal communication between three or more people.

3. Public

- It involves communicating to a wide group of people with very varied traits, background, interests, and persuasions.
- It, therefore, requires a lot of background explanation in expressing your ideas.

Key terms

- Dyad - It - interpersonal communication between two people. In this context, the possibility of clarification and Small group - It - interpersonal communication between three or more people. In this context, the possibility

03. Communication Models (Part 1)

Communication Models (Part 1)

- In simple terms, a model means a systematic description of a phenomenon or abstract process.

JAKOBSON'S MODEL

SAUSSURE'S MODEL

- Ferdinand de Saussure - He is considered the father of modern synchronic linguistics, and described a model in which a concept in the brain triggers a sound pattern in the brain. - The sound pattern in the brain triggers an actual pronunciation of a sound, which goes out of the mouth of a person and into the ear o...
- That is, the sound produces a sound pattern in the brain, and the sound pattern in the brain produces a concept. - Notable in Saussure's model is the idea that the sound pattern is different from the actual sound produced by the mouth or heard by the ear.
- For example, for the Chinese. [d] and [t] are the same sound pattern. - Saussure's model has been called the speech circuit model.

- The first is a picture of two people showing the flow of communication, and the other is a schematic diagram.

SHANNON-WEAVER'S MODEL

- In 1948, Shannon was an American mathematician and electronic engineer, and Weaver was an American scientist.

5. Destination - It is the person (or thing) for whom the message is intended

Forms of Noise

- Physiological noise - It occurs when there is a problem with the health of the person talking or listening.
 - Environmental noise - It occurs when there is a problem with the environment, like a noisy room.
-

04. Communication Models (Part 2)

Communication Models (Part 2)

BERLO'S MODEL

- The Message - is composed of elements that are arranged in a particular structure in a particular form (musical, poetic, prose, etc.).

The Entirety (content) of the message

- - is conveyed in a particular way (treatment).
- The Channel - is the sense used to observe the message.
- Note: Berlo's model includes verbal and nonverbal aspects of communication.
- It is a linear type of model (Communication Theory n.d.).

NIDA'S MODEL

- Eugene Nida - He included an element of noise in his model.

Berg's Discussion of Four Models

1. The Linear, Conduit model

- - It focuses on the conduit or channel.

2. The Circular, Dialogic model

- - It gives a more active role for the receiver.

3. The Feedback, Interaction model

- - It tries to think of messages beyond what is intentionally given by the sender.

4. The self-regulatory model

- -- 2 of 3 -- - It focuses on what the senders and receivers get from the environment.

REFERENCE/S

Key terms

Communication - essential to human life. Without it, we can't function properly

05. Communication Breakdown

Communication Breakdown

- Topic: Communication Breakdown Communication is a process of exchanging thoughts, ideas, and opinions in order to connect with other people.

BARRIERS IN COMMUNICATION

1. Physical Barriers

- - These are the natural or environmental conditions that act as a barrier in communication, in sending the message from the sender to the receiver.

2. Psychological Barriers

- - Also known as mental barriers. - These refer to social and personal issues of a speaker in communicating with others.

3. Cultural Barriers

- - These pertain to communication problems encountered by people regarding their intrinsic values, beliefs, and traditions in conflict with others.

4. Linguistic Barriers

- These pertain to conflicts concerning language and word meanings.
- Because words carry denotative and connotative meanings, they can sometimes cause confusion and misunderstanding.
- The meaning of words and symbols also varies depending on culture.

THREE KINDS OF NOISE

1. External Noises

- These are the "sight, sound, and other stimuli that draw people's attention away from intended meaning." Examples: a.

2. Internal noises

- These are the "thoughts and feelings that interfere with meaning." Examples: a.

3. Semantic noises

- These are the "alternate meanings aroused by a speaker's symbols." - This idea means that a word may have another meaning in the minds of the students.

Key terms

- Communication - process of exchanging thoughts, ideas, and opinions in order to connect with other people. Its
-

06. Various Strategies to Avoid Communication Breakdown

Various Strategies to Avoid Communication Breakdown

Avoid Communication Breakdown

1. Keep Focused

- One way of being focused is to put in mind the purpose of communication.

2. Speak Intelligibly

- Speaking intelligibly or clearly means using the appropriate speaking volume, pitch rate, proper enunciation, stress, and acceptable pronunciation.

3. Listen with your Ears and Eyes

- Pay attention to verbal and non-verbal messages.

4. Minimize Distractions

- Look for a place where you can minimize distractions or noise, like closed areas, empty rooms, or quiet places.
- Lessening the cause for confusion means giving more room to focus and concentrate.

5. Be Specific

- Use simple and concise words as much as possible in delivering a message.
- Being specific means being particular and direct to the point.

6. Do not Jump to Conclusions

- Before you give your comments and judgment, be sure that you have listened attentively to the speaker.
- Conclusions should be drawn after a thorough analysis of the points given or the information received.

A. Completeness

- It is important to the whole communication process.
- The speaker should include everything that the receiver needs to hear, respond to, react to, or evaluate properly.
- S/he should be able to convey all -- 1 of 3 -- pertinent details so the listener or audience will be able to grasp the intended message.

B. Conciseness

- The message should be direct or straight to the point and should be expressed in the least possible number of words.
- Irrelevant information should not be included.

C. Consideration

- In order to be effective, the speaker should give high regard and courtesy to the audience's background information, such as his/her culture, education, religion, status, mood, feelings, and needs.

D. Concreteness

- Effective communication is backed up by facts, figures, and real-life examples or situations.

E. Courtesy

- - The speaker can show respect to his/her receivers through understanding their culture, values, and beliefs.

F. Clearness

- - It implies the use of simple and specific words to express ideas.

G. Correctness

- - Avoiding mistakes in grammar helps to boost the credibility and effectiveness of the message, and at the same time, it eliminates a negative impact on the audience.

Helpful Expressions to Avoid Communication Breakdown

Strategies to Avoid

Communication

Breakdown

Helpful Expressions

Use helpful expressions

Give positive remarks or

07. Functions of Communication

Functions of Communication

- Topic: Functions of Communication Communication, as a human activity, always serves a function.
- Functions of communication refer to how humans use language for different purposes.
- Theoreticians such as Roman Jakobson, Michael Halliday, and Bronislaw Malinowski have categorized the different uses or functions of communication.
- Here are five common functions of language: regulation/control, social interaction, motivation, information, and emotional expression.

1. Regulation/Control

2. Social Interaction

3. Motivation

- -- 1 of 3 -- As a function of communication, it refers to a person using language to express desires, needs, wants, likes and dislikes, inclinations, choices, and aspirations.
- Motivation as a function of communication can be grammatically realized usually as declaratives, but sometimes as commands (grammatically known as imperatives) and rhetorical questions (questions not intended for merely eliciting information) Language Forms for Expressing Motivation: - I need... - I dream of... - I ...

4. Information

- For every action, there is a reaction. ...using a rhetorical question Did you know that some earphones can be used as microphones? b.

5. Emotional Expression

- Humans always need to express their emotions both verbally and nonverbally.
- Emotions are a central part of who we are.
- Aside from being expressed through language and verbal communication, emotional expression is the function of communication most commonly expressed nonverbally.

Key terms

Whether it - love, fear, anger, joy, hope, or any other emotion, humans need to let them out, otherwise

08. Verbal and Nonverbal Communication

Verbal and Nonverbal Communication

VERBAL COMMUNICATION

- It refers to the use of words to convey a message.
- This type of communication can be regarded as efficient and successful if the receiver can easily process the message delivered by the sender.

Aspects to be Considered in Verbal Communication

1. Appropriateness

Formal Communication

- It is the type of communication used in formal, ceremonial, or dignified gatherings.

Types of Formal Communication

- Meetings - Formal One-on-Ones - Interviews - Speeches - Conferences - Presentations

Informal communication

- It is characterized by free, casual, and spontaneous exchange between two or more persons.
- The exchange is a kind of interaction that is unrestrained by rules and conventions.
- It is also the type of communication that occurs in everyday life.

Types of Informal Communication

- Casual Conversations - Gossips - Tales - Inter-relational Activities - Family Social Communication Culture

2. Brevity

3. Clarity

- Clarity refers to using simple yet exact words that directly express your thoughts and emotions.

4. Ethics

- -- 1 of 2 -- Ethics pertains to moral standards that need to be considered when delivering a message.

5. Vividness

- Vividness refers to words that make the conversation or exchange of information lively and vibrant.
- This language should appeal to the senses so the speaker can elicit an active and vigorous response.
- To achieve vividness, speakers use situations that are within the audience's level of experience to establish a connection.

NONVERBAL COMMUNICATION

- It refers to a collaboration of movements that does not require any spoken words in order to convey a message.
- Some of the commonly used nonverbal means of communication are:

1. Bodily Kinesthetic

- Head Movement - Eye Movement - Facial Expressions - Sitting - Standing - Walking - Hand Gestures

2. Attitude and/or Behavior to specific situations

3. Manner of Dressing

4. Tone of Voice

- Defines the kind of speaker one is.

Key terms

Clarity - using simple yet exact words that directly express your thoughts and emotions. It

Vividness - words that make the conversation or exchange of information lively and vibrant

09. Types of Speech Context

Types of Speech Context

- Topic: Types of Speech Context There is never a day that you do not communicate.
- How you communicate with others depends on several elements of communication.

SPEECH CONTEXT

- Context, when referring to speech communication, is the surroundings, circumstances, environment, background, or setting that determines, specifies, or clarifies the meaning of an event. (LumenLearning.com/Elements of Communication).
- According to DeVito, "Context refers to the setting in which the communication takes place.
- The kind of speech context depends on the number and, in the case of intercultural speech context, the identity of the listeners.

Types of Speech Context

1. Intrapersonal

- This refers to a type of communication that is focused on one person, where the speaker acts both as the sender and as the receiver of the message.

- The message is made up of thoughts and feelings, while the medium is the brain that processes what you think and feel.

2. Interpersonal

- We also discussed in our previous lesson that interpersonal communication involves talking to one or a limited number of people.

Types of Interpersonal Communication

- This means that any attempt by a speaker to adjust must bear in mind what is beneficial to all interlocutors. - Also, any attempt to clarify may actually disrupt the flow of communication.
- Public - This type refers to a communication that enables you to send or deliver a message to a crowd. - The message can be transmitted for informative or persuasive purposes. - "In public communication, unlike interpersonal and small groups, the channels are more exaggerated.
- Mass Communication - This refers to communication through television, radio, newspapers, magazines, books, billboards, the internet, and other types of media.

10. Types of Speeches

Types of Speeches

- Topic: Types of Speeches There are two (2) major types of speeches, according to purpose and according to delivery.

I. Types of Speech According to Purpose

- There are three focal types of speeches: informative, persuasive, and entertainment speeches.

A. Informative or Expository Speech

- It is mainly performed for the purpose of educating the audience on new or relevant pieces of information on a particular topic. - As the declaration "informative" implies, an informative speech "lets somebody know" in the audience by presenting them with reliable information on any subject matter.
- Example: a lecture by a teacher - Therefore, the speaker is a trainer, and his or her point is to inform the audience regarding a topic.
- Speeches about objects include those about people, places, animals, structures, etc.
- For example: > The Primary Causes of World War II

3. Speeches About Concepts - are about ideas, philosophies, hypotheses, arguments, etc

4. Speeches About Processes are about how something is made, how something is done, or how

- Possible topics include: > How to administer the final exam for the blind

B. Persuasive Speech -

- It is given solely for the purpose of convincing the audience to agree with the speaker's opinion on a particular topic.

Types of Persuasive Speech

1. Those that deal with questions of fact

- Does President Duterte love to kill drug lords?

2. Those that deal with questions of value

- Do people have the right to choose to die with dignity? -- 1 of 3 --

3. Those that deal with questions of policy

- Should human beings be allowed to use other animals as objects of sport and entertainment?

C. Entertainment Speech

- It aims to share laughter and enjoyment to the audience through witty and humorous lines.

II. Types of Speech According to Delivery

A. Manuscript Speech

- It is the word-for-word iteration of a written message using visual aids. example: news anchor with a teleprompter
- Advantages:

Accurate replication of the written words

Guided speech

Tips for Manuscript Speech

- Practice the speech time and again until you are used to it and sound natural.

B. Memorized Speech

- It is the rote recitation of a written message that the speaker has committed to memory. example: actor's dialogue
- Advantages:

Accurate repetition of the printed words from memory

Comfortable to move around the stage

Tips for Memorized Speech

C. Extemporaneous Speech

- Presentation of a carefully planned and rehearsed speech, spoken in a conversational manner using brief notes.

Helps you look confident and secure

Connects the audiences

Tips for Extemporaneous Speech

Produce outline

Put your points in order

Use facts and real-life experience as your example

Manage your time well

Rehearse, rehearse, rehearse

C. Impromptu speech

- It is the presentation of a short message without advance preparation and is for people knowledgeable about the subject.

Key terms

Once you - requested to say something, pause for a moment to plan in your head what to

11. Types of Speech Styles

Types of Speech Styles

- Topic: Types of Speech Styles The way we communicate varies depending on a lot of factors such as the speech context, speech purpose, and speech delivery.
- The form of language that the speaker uses which [sic] is characterized by the degree of formality is known as speech style .

SPEECH STYLES

Martin Joos

Types of Speech Styles

1. Intimate

- This style is used between people who have very close relationships.

2. Casual

- It is an informal communication between groups and peers who have something to share and have shared background information but do not have close relations.
- Example: classmates Note: Jargon, slang, and vernacular language are used People speaking with a casual style: - Use a lot of trendy words and phrases and speak in incomplete or elided sentences.

3. Consultative

- It is used in semi-formal and standard communication. - Here, the speaker constantly observes the listener's verbal and nonverbal cues for feedback as to whether the speaker seems to be giving too little or too much information.
- Example: teacher and student Note: Professional or mutually acceptable language is a must in this style.

4. Formal

- It is a one-way straightforward speech. - It is called upon when speaking in formal settings no matter how the participants are related to each other. - Much of the language spoken in formal style depends on what the education system has taught individuals as to be used in formal settings.
- Characteristics of formal style: a.
- Note: One important word used in formal style is the word may (such as in, you may speak now"). b.

5. Frozen

- It is the most formal communicative style that is usually used during solemn ceremonies and events. - It is not really

- intended to give a particular message but to allow a reader to find many meanings for oneself. - It exists as literature for a given community. - Its emphasis is on its role-for creatively derivin...
 - Quarter 1 - Module 6: Types of Speeches and Speech Style.
-

12. Types of Speech Act

Types of Speech Act

- Topic: Types of Speech Act Communication happens effectively when the message is passed clearly; it becomes useful and meaningful when both the sender and the receiver understand the idea being put across.

SPEECH ACTS

- A speech act is an act of communication.

JOHN AUSTIN (1962)

- He is a philosopher of language and the developer of the Speech Act Theory. - He coined the term "speech act" in his book How to Do Things with Words.

Three Types of Speech Act

1. Locutionary Act

- This is simply the speaking part of the speech act. - This act happens with the utterances of a sound, a word or even a phrase as a natural unit of speech.
- Examples of Locutionary Acts: "Wow!" (When someone is amazed) "Hello!" (greeting someone) "Get out!" (a strong command)

2. Illocutionary Act

- This is the acting part of the speech act - the very action done by saying something.
- Examples of Illocutionary Acts: It's more fun in the Philippines. (opinion) I'll help you clean the house tomorrow. (promise) Get my things in the office. (order)

3. Perlocutionary Act

- -- 1 of 2 -- - It refers to the consequent effect of what was said.
- This is based on the particular context in which the speech act was mentioned. - This is seen when a particular effect is sought from either the speaker or the listener, or both.
- Examples of Perlocutionary Acts: "We can do this.
- We must start working together." (persuading) "Smoking destroys your health, certain as it brings diseases, it kills - you, your loved ones, and others!" (detering)

JOHN SEARLE (1976)

- He is a professor from the University of California, Berkeley.

Searle's Classification of Speech Act

1. Assertive - Saying something you believe is true

- Some examples of an assertive act: suggesting, putting forward, swearing, boasting and concluding Example: "No one can love you better than I do."

2. Directive - Asking or telling someone to do something

- Some examples of a directive act: asking, ordering, requesting, inviting, advising, and begging.

3. Commissive - You are promising or committing to do something in the future

- Examples of a commissive act: promising, planning, vowing, and betting.

4. Expressive -You are showing your feelings or emotions

- Some examples of an expressive act: thanking, apologizing, welcoming and deploring Example: "Thank heavens, you came to save me!"

5. Declarative - You are making something happen just by saying it

- Some examples of declarations: blessing, firing, baptizing, bidding, passing a sentence, and excommunicating Example: "You are hired!" (By saying that someone is hired, an employee causes or brings about the person's acceptance to the job; consequently, this changes his external situation.) Vibal Group, Inc. .

Key terms

- Speech acts - performed when a person offers an apology, greeting, request, complaint, invitation

13. Types of Communicative Strategies

Types of Communicative Strategies

- Topic: Types of Communicative Strategies Engaging in a conversation is not just a simple process of talking and listening.

COMMUNICATIVE STRATEGIES

Types of Communicative Strategy

1. Nomination

- At the start of a discussion or speech, the topic must be identified or nominated. - Nominating a topic allows the listeners or audience to tune in to the topic, recall background information they have about it, and prepare them to listen to what is to be said about the topic. - Good topic nomination helps prevent...
- This may make the person you are talking to uncomfortable and may refuse to talk with you. - Topics like politics and religion should also be avoided because these may cause quarrel or disagreement.

2. Restriction

- A speaker must restrict the topic of discussion to make it specific enough to be manageable. - It is a strategy used when responses need to be within the set categories or instructions. - These instructions confine you as a speaker and limit what you can say.

3. Turn-taking

- It pertains to the process by which people decide who takes the conversational floor. - Turn-taking during a discussion involves changing from one speaker to another in a way that does not disrupt the communication process.
- Pausing is a nonverbal cue that will do as well.
- This way, you can have a meaningful and productive conversation. -- 1 of 3 -- - Also, always show politeness when you need to take the conversational floor from the person currently speaking.

4. Topic Control

5. Topic Shifting

- Topic shifting involves moving from one topic to another. - This strategy is used to change the topic to a new one which helps communication keep going.

6. Repair

- Repair is the self-righting mechanism in any social interaction. - It refers to how speakers address the problems in speaking, listening, and comprehending that they encounter in a conversation. - Particular attention must be given to the piece of utterance that produced misunderstanding.
- Thus, the speaker must repair this miscommunication by rephrasing or using other words that express the meaning better to his or her audience. - We can employ this strategy whenever we encounter problems in communication to prevent a breakdown.
- The speaker may repeat his/her statements using the following expressions: "Let me repeat myself." "Again..." "I would like to reiterate that..." Repair strategies also include requesting clarification or making a clarifying question, request for repetition, and request for definition, translation or explanation.
- Note: - Repair may also include addressing physical and physiological issues affecting communication. -- 2 of 3 --

7. Termination

- Termination refers to the conversation participants' close-initiating expressions that end a topic in a conversation. - This strategy is used to end an interaction or close a topic. - Most of the time, the topic initiator or the person who opened the topic takes responsibility to signal the end of the discussion a...
- I must be going." "Thanks for your time.
- Quarter 2 - Module 1: Types of Communicative Strategy, First Edition.

Key terms

- Engaging in a conversation - not just a simple process of talking and listening
-

14. Principles of Effective Speech Writing

Principles of Effective Speech Writing

- Topic: Principles of Effective Speech Writing A good speech requires days or even weeks of preparation depending on the topic and the availability of materials needed.

PRINCIPLES OF EFFECTIVE SPEECH WRITING

1. AUDIENCE PROFILE

- Why should they be interested?

Audience Analysis

Age Bracket

Gender

Educational Background

Place of Residence (city, town,

Marital Status

Language spoken

Religious Affiliations/Beliefs

2. LOGICAL ORGANIZATION

- -- 1 of 3 -- - The logical organization or arrangement of thoughts when it comes to speech writing can be defined as all aspects of your writing that help the reader move smoothly from one sentence to the next, and from one paragraph to another.
- The written speech has three parts: the introduction, the body and th...
- 3 Parts of a Written Speech

A. Introduction

- - It is the most crucial part of the speech.
- It is generally only 10 to 15 percent of the time the speaker spends speaking.

B. Body

- - The body of the speech is the core part of the speech that addresses the main ideas and principles of the speech.
- It consists of the main points.

Methods of Organization (Flores 2016)

1. Problem-Solution Order - It explains the problem and suggests a possible solution

4. Comparison and Contrast Order - It presents comparison and contrast of two or three points

5. Spatial/Geographical Order - Going from one place to another, from one direction to another

6. Causal Order - It involves a discussion of both cause and effect of an issue

C. Conclusion

- - It functions as the summarizer of the entire speech.

3. DURATION

- - It is the time and length of your speech.
- No matter how long the speech is, always divide it into five parts: an introduction, the body and a conclusion.

4. WORD CHOICE

- - There are a lot of vocabularies available to describe one's idea.
- However, the speaker should carefully use the correct word in writing the speech.
- The use of conversational language helps put the audience at ease and creates a special bond between the speaker and the audience.
- The following words should be avoided in a written speech. a.
- Examples of Jargon: Technical terms in medical field:

Idiopathic (which means unknown cause)

Hyperventilate (rapid breathing)

Terms in in the field of Law

Affidavit (sworn)

Circumstantial (specific details)

5. GRAMMATICAL CORRECTNESS

- - It is important to use correct grammar to prevent misunderstanding and misinterpretation between you and the audience.
- Good command of the language helps listeners understand you quickly.
- Grammar inconsistencies slow down the communication process and generate negative impressions for the audience, as your ide...
- Quarter 2 - Module 3: Principles of Effective Speech Writing and Delivery, First Edition.

Key terms

- Jargons - specific words or phrases used by a certain individual or group which are difficult for others to

15. Principles of Effective Speech Delivery

Principles of Effective Speech Delivery

- Topic: Principles of Effective Speech Delivery Effective speaking means being able to say what you need to say in a manner that it is heard and acted upon.

TOOLS FOR EFFECTIVE SPEECH DELIVERY

1. Articulation

- This refers to properly and appropriately pronouncing the words, phrases, and sentences in a given speech. - People always judge how well you speak in general.
- The perceived intellect or education is sometimes used to measure how well you articulate. - The instance on how well and precisely you form vowels and consonants using your lips, tongue, jaw, and palate to form the sounds to speak is crucial in making your message get across. - On the same idea, diction and enunciation...

2. Modulation

- It refers to how the speaker controls his or her voice and the rhythm employed in uttering the words of the speech. - This happens when you control or adjust the tone or volume of your voice. - Modulation has various meanings, such as a change of key in music or of the sound of a person's voice.

3. Stage presence

- It refers to the speaker's ability to get and secure the audience's interest in listening to him/her through his or her presentation style. - Every time the speaker faces his audience, he is encouraged to keep his poise, posture, gestures, and movements since they may make or break the presentation.

Good Stage Presence

- Essentially engages the audience into the performance. - It is the ability to make the audience connect with the speaker and pull them into the story being told, and as a result, the audience is affected by the feelings, emotions, and ideas being -- 1 of 2 -- conveyed.

4. Gestures

- To effectively communicate emotions and enthusiasm while speaking, the speaker must use emphatic and descriptive gestures. - These help enhance the verbal content of our speech. - It should appear spontaneous but purposeful. - Arm and hand movements constitute gestures.

5. Facial expressions

- They are essential in setting the emotional tone for a speech. - It is really helpful that facial expressions jive with the message being delivered. - In addition, facial expressions communicate various types of emotions which reflect the speaker's moods and personality traits.
- For example: To achieve the positive tone of the speaker before he begins, he simply must glance at the audience and smile. (A smile may be simple but its value is indispensable in communicating friendliness, openness, and confidence.)

6. Movements

7. Rapport

- Quarter 2 - Module 3: Principles of Effective Speech Writing and Delivery, First Edition.

Key terms

- Effective speaking - being able to say what you need to say in a manner that it is heard and acted upon
-

16. Preparing and Delivering an Informative Speech

Preparing and Delivering an Informative Speech

- One of the main purposes of this speech is to increase the awareness of the audience; accurate, up-to-date, and necessary information should be prioritized.
- Delivering an effective informative speech may include: - Explaining explicitly the significance of the subject matter or the topic and by showing interest on the topic.
- Note: It will answer questions like Why should they waste their time listening to you?

CHARACTERISTICS OF INFORMATIVE SPEECH

- Below are features of informative speeches showing similarities and differences to other speech types: a.
- Remember: These types of speeches should not be argumentative; they do not intend to change the audience's attitude. b.

- Details - Use accurate data and appropriate illustrations or examples. - Transitions should be used to signal significant details to your audience.

RHETORICAL METHODS IN ORGANIZING INFORMATIVE SPEECHES

1. Chronological

- This type of method follows a time pattern procedure.
- Example of Chronological Order: History of Music Entertainment in the Philippines I.

A. Important Event 1

B. Important Event 2

II. Music Entertainment in 1970-1980

A. Important Event 1

B. Important Event 2

2. Sequential

- This type of method is similar to the chronological method but differs in terms of the organization of information. - In sequential order, the information is arranged based on a step-by-step sequence that illustrates or describes a specific process.
- Example of Sequential Order: Step 1: Find out about jobs. - Job openings in your region - Skills or requirements these jobs demand and how they pair your own Step 2: Prepare your resumé. - Create a list of your skills. - Prepare a portfolio of any awards and certificates you have received - Decide who will be your r...

3. Spatial

Touring the Senate of the Philippines

I. Parts of the First Floor

II. Parts of the Second Floor

III. Parts of the Third Floor

4. Cause and Effect

- This type of method follows the cause-effect relationship. - It focuses on two main points: the cause of a particular subject and its effects on another.

Example of Cause and Effect

I. Poverty

II. Unemployment

III. Lack of Education

5. Topical/Logical

- This method of organization is used when presenting an idea that has several other sub ideas. - It organizes information based on different subtopics within a larger topic or the "types" of things that fall within a bigger category.

Example of Topical/Logical

Basketball in the Philippines

I. College Basketball

II. Professional Basketball

STRUCTURE OF AN INFORMATIVE SPEECH

1. Introduction

- Salutation and attention getter - State goal or purpose of your speech - State thesis statement - Preview the points you are going to discuss

2. Body

- Paint a clear mental picture to your audience to get your ideas across using chronological, sequential, spatial, cause-effect, or topical patterns. - Use transitions to signpost your points: "First.

3. Conclusion

- Signal to your audience that you are about to end your speech. - Restate your thesis. - Recap the major points you have discussed.

Key terms

Informative Speech - crafted to offer stimulating and valuable information to a general audience or a particular

Below - features of informative speeches showing similarities and differences to other speech types:
Child labor - caused by the following factors: poverty, unemployment, and lack of education

17. Preparing and Delivering a Persuasive Speech

Preparing and Delivering a Persuasive Speech

- It is a particular kind of speech in which the definitive goal of the speaker is to convince his or her audience to accept his or her standpoint.

CHARACTERISTICS OF PERSUASIVE SPEECH

1. Introductory Phase

- In a persuasive speech, begin with a strong impression or feeling on a significant issue - a specific issue with important differences of views or opinions.

2. Goal

- Your objective as the speaker is to convince your audience to agree with your arguments.

3. Audience

- It is important to have a strong awareness of your audience. - Are you speaking to a group of students or professionals?

4. Voice

- Consider speaking with conviction and assurance but with sensible and unbiased remarks.

5. Focus of Persuasion

- Facts used in an argument must be verifiable. (They must be proven to be either true or false.)

6. Value

- This is where you can argue on the right or wrong of a particular action or one is better or worse than the other.

7. Policy

- This focus of persuasive speech persuades the audience that actions should or should not be taken.
- Examples: - Persuading the audience that junk food should be banned in primary and secondary levels. - Influencing the audience that they should patronize Filipino movies.

METHODS OF PERSUASION

- The backbone for this persuasive strength in public speaking may have been established from Aristotle's forms of rhetoric called ethos, pathos, and logos, which allow for the improvement of persuasion.

1. Ethos

- This offers the audience understanding of the speaker's appeal, credibility, and authority. - In a nutshell, credibility is recognized through the opinions of audience on the following: - Competence (or expertise) - Authority -- 1 of 3 -- - Truthfulness - Respect

2. Pathos

3. Logos

- It utilizes strategies of logic to convince the audience.
- In short, logos means persuading by the use of reasoning. - Well-defined and rational arguments may be attained using the following: - substantial pieces of evidence and examples - up-to-date statistical data - relevant research studies - verifiable facts - significant historical pieces of evidence

STRUCTURE IN PREPARING AND DELIVERING PERSUASIVE SPEECH

- Components in organizing a persuasive speech are similar with other types of speeches except for a few salient features:

A. Introduction

- Salutation and attention getter - State the goal or purpose of your speech - State the thesis statement - Preview the points you are going to discuss

B. Distinction from Other Types of Speeches

- Standard persuasive speeches provide opinions on whether an action or something is harmless or harmful, should or should not be done.

1. I will argue that cosmetic surgery has done more harm than good

2. I believe that all citizens should be required to participate in all elections

4. I will argue that students should be held legally responsible for bullying in schools

C. Body

- - Use transitions to signpost your points such as: First, I will talk about how cosmetic surgery results in permanent physical damages.

D. Conclusion

REFERENCE/S

18. Preparing and Delivering an Entertainment Speech

Preparing and Delivering an Entertainment Speech

- This lesson assumes that the word entertainment refers to light-hearted humor, not entertainment in a broad sense in which horror, suspense, sadness, or even inspiration are considered entertaining to an audience.

PREPARING AN ENTERTAINMENT SPEECH

1. Know Your Audience

- Different kinds of audiences need different ways of being entertained.
- Therefore, you need to know the background of your audience. (This includes their sentiments, values, allegiances, and persuasions.) In addition, you need to know the kind of sense of humor that a particular audience will have.

2. Learn from Veteran Speakers

3. Understand the Available Techniques of Producing Entertainment and Humor

- For Example: You can start with Joyce Kilmer's very famous poem, "I think I shall never see a poem as lovely...", but then, instead of finishing the original line you say, "as me." You can also produce humor by relating an embarrassing experience you had.

4. Understand the Unacceptable Methods of Producing Humor

Giving sexually-charged jokes or remarks

- - This method is relegated to places that are not considered part of respectable society. -- 1 of 3 --

Toilet humor

- - This consists of making remarks to taboo topics relating to the excretory system and other less palatable aspects of human hygiene.
- This method is also relegated to places that are not considered part of a respectable society.

Producing humor at someone's expense

- - This is a very unacceptable method for producing humor.

WRITING AN ENTERTAINMENT SPEECH

1. Prepare the backbone

- - The backbone of your speech is composed of the main ideas of a narrative, informative, or persuasive speech.
- Your introduction will be a statement of your thesis--the main idea of your whole speech.
- Similarly, your conclusion will be a creative restatement of the same thesis.

3. Write your thesis

- - Turn it into your introduction by reexpressing it in a way that is entertaining to your audience.
- Just as in writing your other main ideas, you may express it by combining it with an anecdote, joke, witty comment, or entertaining remarks.

4. Restate your thesis as your conclusion

- - Your conclusion does not need to contain entertaining remarks.
- Simply inviting your audience to accept your conclusion is enough.

5. Edit your speech for grammar and word use

DELIVERING AN ENTERTAINMENT SPEECH

1. Test your Delivery

2. Make Use of Verbal and Nonverbal Language

- Verbal and nonverbal languages increase the possibility of entertainment.
- Even a comment that is not very entertaining can be made more so through the use of tone, change of voice, facial expressions, or gestures.
- Much of the entertainment value of your speech should still come from the content of your speech.

3. Avoid Overused Routines

- - Overused jokes, gestures, or other elements can bore your audience. -- 2 of 3 -- (When this happens, your audience will not be entertained and may even find you irritating.) - However, you can still use overused routines by introducing a new element in them that your audience can find unexpected and surprisingly e...